A guy thought he was dead, but in reality he was very much alive.

His hallucination became a real problem for his family and they took him to see a psychiatrist. After spending many laborious sessions trying to convince the guy that he was still alive, the psychiatrist tried one last approach.

He opened his medical book and proceeded to show the man that dead men don’t bleed.

After a mind-numbing study, the man seemed convinced that dead men don’t bleed.

The psychiatrist asked, “Do you agree now that dead men don’t bleed?”
“Yes I do,” the man replied.
“Very well, then,” the psychiatrist said.

He took a pin out and pricked the man’s finger. Out came a drop of blood.

“What does that tell you?”
“Oh my goodness!” the patient exclaimed as he stared doubtfully at his finger. “Dead men DO bleed!!”
